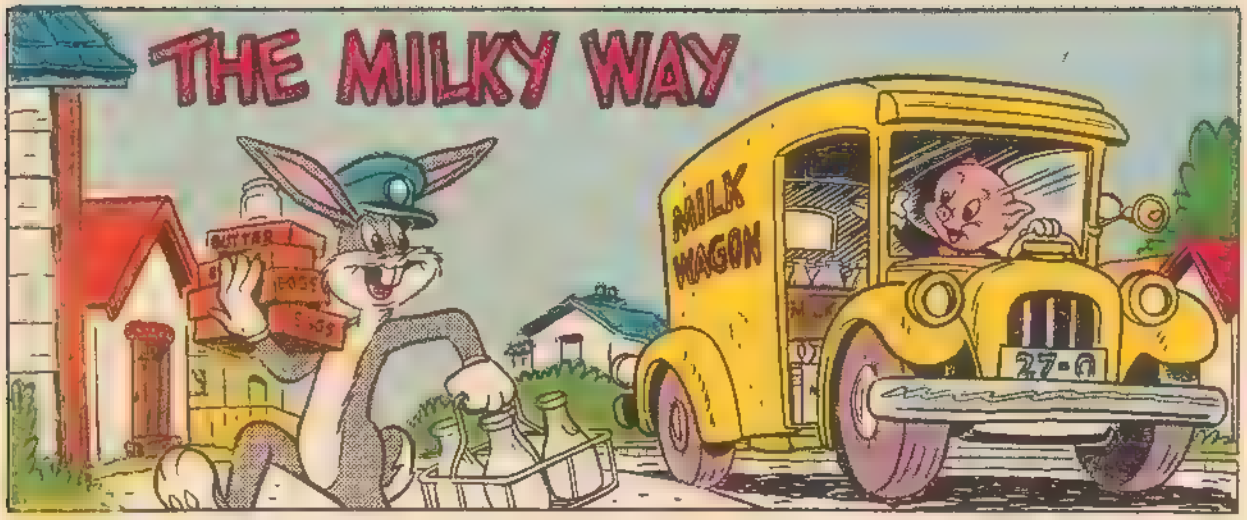
AND SO THE PROBLEM IS SOLVED!



"Hey, Bugs!" Porky called out excitedly. "Come on out! There's an emergency down the road and I said we'd help!"

Bugs Bunny stuck his head out of the window. "What kind of an emergency?" he asked.

"Mr Pasture, the milkman, took sick," Porky explained. "I told him to go on home and not to worry . . . we'd make the deliveries for him."

"What are we supposed to do?" Bugs asked as he joined Porky and started down the road with him.

Porky shrugged. "One of us drives and the other delivers, I guess."

Bugs started to say something, but Porky cut in with, "And we'll take turns on the deliverin', too!"

Bugs threw out his hands. "Natch," he said in a resigned tone.

They found the truck and hopped up on it.

"Jeepers!" Bugs exclaimed, eyeing the bottles of milk and cartons of eggs stacked up ready for delivery. "He didn't even get started, did he?"

Porky shook his head and handed Bugs a long piece of paper. "Here's where we go and what we give 'em. How about my drivin' first?"

Bugs bowed. "Be my guest," he murmured as he flopped into the seat next to Porky. "Oh, great!" he gasped, looking at the list. "There are forty-seven names here and each one wants somethin' different!"

"Well, don't just sit there," Porky told him impatiently. "Start puttin' the first order together."

Bugs sighed and got to his feet. "This is gonna be strenuous," he prophesied as he gathered up a dozen eggs and two quarts of milk.

"That house over there is the first stop," Porky announced as he steered the wagon toward the curb.

Bugs started out the door, then suddenly reached back and grabbed Mr. Pasture's cap off the hook. He clapped it onto the back of his head and grinned rakishly. "How's that?" he asked. "Might as well LOOK businesslike, anyhow!"

Porky eyed him carefully. "No comment," he said.

Bugs started up the driveway toward the back door and almost tripped over a large yellow cat which sat firmly in his path.

"Meow," the cat rumbled. "Pffft!"

Bugs stopped short and leaned over. "Nice kitty," he said halfheartedly. "See the nice milk?"

As an answer, the cat whizzed between Bugs's feet, sending him sprawling and the dozen eggs flipping into the air. Before Bugs could get to his feet, the eggs landed on top of him in a shower of shells and yolks. "Well," he sighed philosophically, "at least the milk didn't break."

Porky leaned out of the truck. "You all right?" he shouted.

"Fine," Bugs drawled, "though I didn't plan on this, eggzactly!"

Making his way slowly to the back of the house, Bugs left the two quarts of milk on the top step. On the way back to the truck, he heard a crash and froze in his tracks.

"It's the cat," Porky called. "He just jumped on the bottles."

Bugs eased his way back to the truck. "What do we do now?" he asked.

Porky shrugged. "Go on to the next order, I guess." He moved over. "You drive and I'll deliver."

Bugs tried to start the truck, but it wouldn't budge. He tried again, but with no better luck. He glanced at Porky. "What did you do to it?" he demanded.

Porky was indignant. "What did I do? I drove, that's what I did. It was working perfectly a few minutes ago."

"Well, it's not workin' now, that's for sure." Bugs let out his breath. "It's a cinch we can't carry all of this stuff and walk!" He shuddered at the thought.

Porky got out of the truck and lifted the hood. While he was tinkering with the motor, Bugs glanced out the window and spied a vegetable wagon down the road.

"Say," Bugs cried, "maybe Farmer John will let us transfer the milk and stuff to his wagon!"

Porky made a face. "That horse of his is pretty skittish," he reminded Bugs. "I'm not too sure I want to get close to him."

"Aw, he's all right," Bugs assured him, "long as Farmer John's there. He knows how to handle him."

"Well," Porky sighed, "it's worth a try. I can't do a thing with this motor."

Bugs scrambled out of the truck and followed Porky down the road. Porky looked back over his shoulder at him.

"What are you hanging back for?" he asked suspiciously.

Bugs waved an airy hand. "Who's hangin' back?" he replied casually. "I'm just kind of gettin' the lay of the land."

"Well," Porky muttered, "get it from up here, will you? I don't want to meet that horse head-on by myself!"

As if to answer him, Farmer John's horse reared up on its hind legs and let out a loud NEIGH.

Bugs left the ground. "Jumpin' Jackfish!" he cried. "I think I'd rather walk!"

"I've got him, boys! It's okay," Farmer John called out.

Porky and Bugs ventured close enough to explain their problem. "Why, sure," Farmer John said cheerfully. "I'll be glad to help you out. Come on. We'll put your stuff on my wagon."

"Why don't you back your wagon up to the milk truck," Bugs suggested. "It would be easier to load." To Porky, he added in a whisper, "And it'll keep that horse at a distance."

"You're so right," Porky hissed back.

Meantime, the horse was trying desperately to see what was going on behind him. Suddenly, he lifted his hind legs and kicked with all of his might. Vegetables scattered everywhere.

"Yipes!" Bugs shouted happily, "it's rainin' carrots!"

A little later, with plans altered somewhat, they made their deliveries with the vegetable wagon pulling the milk truck.

Bugs examined the last name on the list. "One quart of milk," he read, as he reached back and picked up the last bottle. Very carefully, he removed a stray carrot from it. "There's nothin' on the list that says the customer ordered this," he grinned.

And, chomping happily on the carrot, Bugs made the last delivery of the day.

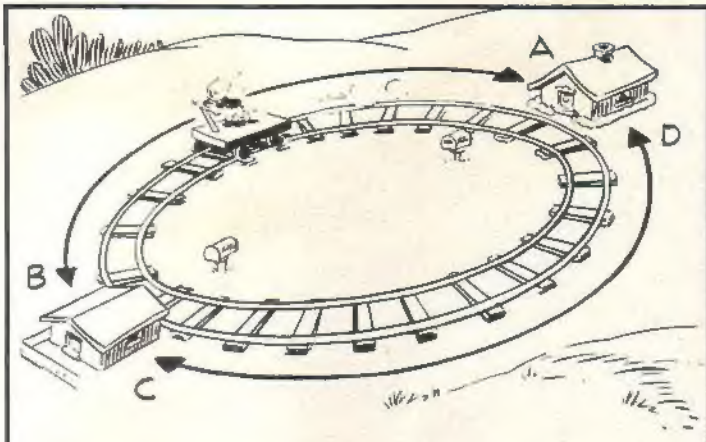
DELL COMICS ARE GOOD COMICS

Bugs Bunny BANTER and BAFFLERS



Here is a circular railroad track. Porky lives on one side, and Petunia on the other. The distance from A to B is EXACTLY the same as the distance from C to D. When Porky visits Petunia, he travels by handcar along track A to B, making the trip in 75 minutes. He comes home on track C to D, traveling at EXACTLY the same speed as before. This trip takes him 1 hour and 15 minutes. What is the difference in time?

BOTH THE SAME! 75 MIN. = 1 HR. 15 MIN.

PETUNIA

Petunia found 35 words in the letters of her name. How many can you find? Try it with a friend and see who can find the most words!
